

Speech Screening

Articulation screening assesses the child's ability to produce a variety of consonant and vowel sounds to form words.

Language screening assesses both receptive and expressive language skills.

Receptive language refers to the child's understanding of verbal language including the child's ability to follow directions, understand vocabulary and respond to a variety of question forms.

Expressive language is the child's ability to combine words into sentences to communicate with others.